Raphael's and Zadkiel's Almanacs for 1881 are in the hands of American astrologers. A glance at their outside covers ought to inspire emotion. Within, lies clearly revealedsubject, of course, to the usual trifling miscalculations and differences of opinion-the hidden mysteries that lie enshrouded in the womb of the coming year. Raphael that there will be rings up the curtain of 1881 with

In one bony hand a scythe is grasped, in the other a large black banner, with an astrological device having reference to the conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in Taurus on the volcano in a state of frantic eruption. In one corner a couple of railroad trains are telescoping, and in the nights. Turning to the text, both almancs agree in pronouncing 1881 "A GREAT YEAR."

Speaking of the first three months. Zadkiel has the following exhilarat-ing reference to these United States: "At Washington the seventeenth legree of Virgo will be on the meridisn, Uranus having just cul-minated.
